Joint Chiefs of Staff Chairman Adm. Mike Mullen visited Guantanamo Bay [GTMO] servicemembers and held an all-hands call Jan. 13 at Naval Station [NAVSTA] GTMO Windjammer Auditorium.

An audience comprised of all five branches of the military packed the auditorium as the chairman first thanked the servicemembers for their service and then proceeded to a question and answer session.

Mullen discussed

the importance of the work the professionals in GTMO perform daily and explained the gravity of work done on base from a global perspective.

“The world, not just the United States, is focused on what is going on here in GTMO,” said Mullen. “[The work done in GTMO] has to be right because the consequences of getting it wrong are substantial. GTMO has really performed extraordinarily well and really delivered in a very difficult mission.

Construction convenes to aid street repaving project

Naval Station Guantanamo Bay Public Affairs

For the past few weeks KNIK Construction Company has been gathering materials from an area below the ridge line on Kittery Beach Road across from the golf course in order to repave some roads in and around Naval Station (NAVSTA) Guantanamo Bay (GTMO).

Representatives from KNIK have assured NAVSTA personnel that when they have finished collecting all the material needed for this project residents will not be able to see the bay from the golf course!

“More than 50,000 tons of aggregate [materials used in construction, including sand, gravel or crushed stone] will be pulled from this area, mixed together into asphalt, in order to complete the road repaving projects. In the housing areas alone, 9600 tons of asphalt will be used,” said Jim Kirsch, KNIK Construction project superintendent.

According to KNIK and the NAVSTA housing office, repaving will beginning Jan. 23 and proceed through Jan. 26.

The community center parking lot, Marina Point Road and House M116 rear parking lot at Marine Site Housing will be closed during this time.

Around Jan. 28 through Feb. 1 KNIK will begin work at the Nob Hill housing area with grading and rocking of the road. There will also be a crew working at Villamar housing area preping small side lots and Villimar 47 parking lot.

Due to the magnitude of the paving operation, residents are reminded that dates and times may vary, but KNIK and NAVSTA housing are doing their best to stay on track and to notify residents of any changes in the schedule.

“Residents living in particular housing areas may be inconvenienced for about four to five days with prep time and actual paving and also residents won't be able to drive or walk on black top for at least 24 hrs after asphalt has been laid,” added Kirsch.

Prior to work beginning in your area, KNIK will give residents two to three days notice to move all vehicles, boats, trailers, etc. from the street. During this time residents are encouraged to take down any valuables from the walls or shelves due to vibrations.

If any resident has a special medical condition that requires the contractors' attention, please contact your housing manager prior to the time frame scheduled for your area.

The number to the NAVSTA Housing office is 4172 or 5262. A shuttle will be provided by KNIK for any special needs.

Please keep a close watch on all children during this time.

The following is a list of housing areas to be paved: Nob Hill, Villamar, Caravella Point, Marina Point, Community Center Parking Lot, Marine Site, Iguana Terrace, FH Self Help Warehouse and Granadillo Point Road.

Work will commence at 7:30 a.m. and end by 9 p.m. with the exception of a steam roller, but the housing office assures residents that this should not create a loud noise or disturbance. If any resident encounters any problems in their housing area please contact the housing office and not KNIK.

Story by Patrick McSherry

Looking down, Gunner's Mate 3rd Class J.J. Gaskin saw the gun deck engulfed in flames. He yelled to the Chief Master-at-Arms that the ship was afire, rang the fire alarm and deployed a hose. Unfortunately the steam fire-fighting system, thoughtfully installed for this type of emergency, was not operable, the boiler being shut down for cleaning and necessary repairs to the pumps.

Yeoman 3rd Class D. J. Mabie, on hearing the alarm, ran into the fire to get to the file room.

With the room perimeter already engulfed, the stacks of papers ablaze and the porthole glass broken by the fire, efforts to save anything, including his own ditty box and personal belongings, were pointless.

Within five minutes of hearing the explosions, Stearns was aboard the burning ship.

In that short amount of time flames were already pouring upwards, out of the gun deck hatch.

Stearns gave the orders to flood the magazines, but found that it had already been done. The fire hose was having little effect, even though the men had already manned the hand pumps, working on their knees to keep their lungs from filling with the smoke that had filled the ship.

Stearns noted that the fire burned "with the speed of a prairie fire" and the gun deck had already become "a roaring furnace." The fire sped upwards, incinerating the open deck canvas awning and engulfing the aft portion of the old warhorse. The fire was so intense that the barrels of the ships' four-inch rapid-fire guns heated to the point that they were deformed by gravity before being quenched in their bent shape by the Bay's waters. One of these guns is now displayed at the end of the parking lot at the Bayview on Deer Point.

Crews began to arrive from the USS DES MOINES. A bucket brigade was formed. Marines from South Toro Cay headed toward the burning ship. In spite of these efforts Stearns could easily see that it was all for naught. To save lives, he gave the order to abandon ship. Men on the bow, trapped and unable to reach the gangway, were forced to leap overboard. Less than fifteen minutes had passed since the fire started.

Stearns mustered the crew ashore, and found that all had escaped the fire, but none had any gear nor even the basic semblance of a uniform.

The danger to the crew had not ended, however. Starting about 11:25 p.m., the ammunition in the magazines, which apparently did not fully flood⁷⁷, began to explode and the air was filled with shrieking fragments of four and six inch shells.

The crew took shelter under the cliffs, until the explosions subsided at about 4 a.m. Morning found the crew looking more like "circus clowns than sailors" as some of the men donned clothing stored ashore by a minstrel troupe. The men searched for any piece of clothing to help protect them from the blazing Cuban sun. In the morning light, tents were erected and the men went into camp near the smoking ribs of their former ship, a complete loss.

Today, MONONGAHELA remains where she went down, unmolested. Part of her burned out copper-sheathed hull sits upright in the restricted waters south of Deer Point, her sternpost poking to within six feet of the water surface. To this day, when the sun and the water are just right, officers living on Deer Point can look out their windows and spot the wreck of this once noble ship, lying in quiet repose in the safety of the American navy base.

CNO: 'LCS will be the workhorse of the Navy'

By MCC Rhonda Burke,

Navy Region Midwest Public Affairs

MARINETTE, Wis. (NNS) -- Marinette Marine Corporation, which is building the Navy's first littoral combat ship, USS Freedom (LCS 1), was the final stop, Jan. 14, for Chief of Naval Operations (CNO) Adm. Gary Roughead on his eight-day tour of private and public shipyards throughout the U.S.

Roughead received a progress report on the ship, designed to provide the U.S. Navy with greater flexibility and capability in operating in the littoral or "green water" coastal areas.

"The Navy has a gap we need to fill in the littoral and that is what LCS is going to do for us," Roughead said. "This ship is perfectly suited to operate near the shore and to engage in Maritime Security Operations that will ensure the free-flow of commerce and resources around the world. I predict that the LCS is going to be a workhorse in the United States Navy."

CNO said the Navy is closing in on some of the critical milestones to get the first LCS to sea. He was pleased with the progress he saw during his visit.

"Bringing a ship into the final stage and getting it to sea is not an easy thing," Roughead said. "The critical thing is to get it to sea, get it tested and get it to work doing the Navy's mission."

As the crew prepares for the final months before bringing the ship to life at its commissioning this fall, the CNO reiterated to them the importance of their mission to the future of the Navy.

"They are fulfilling a very important role in this program and in our Navy. They are the ones who will be responsible for making sure this ship goes to sea and realizes its full potential at sea. They are the ones, the only ones, that will set this class of ship up for success," Roughead said. "It is a significant responsibility. But it is a responsibility well suited to a United MARINETTE, Wis. (Jan. 14, 2008) Chief of Naval Operations (CNO) Adm. Gary Roughead talks with crewmembers of the pre-commissioned Littoral Combat Ship (LCS) unit Freedom while visiting Marinette Marine Shipyard. Roughead told the crew he was ready to see them take the first LCS to sea.

States Sailor. They are ready and they are eager and I look forward to them taking this ship to sea."

The 377-foot Freedom is capable of speeds in excess of 40 knots and can operate in water less than 20 feet deep. The ship will act as a platform for launch and recovery of manned and unmanned vehicles. Its modular design will support interchangeable mission packages, allowing the ship to be reconfigured for antisubmarine warfare, mine warfare, or surface warfare missions on an as-needed basis.

Freedom will be manned by one of two rotational crews, blue and gold, similar to the rotational crews assigned to Trident submarines. The crews will be augmented by one of three mission package crews during focused mission assignments.

Freedom was christened Sept. 24,

2006. She is slated for commissioning the fall of 2008 in Milwaukee, Wis., and will be homeported in San Diego.

As detailed in the 2007-2008 CNO Guidance, building the Navy's future fleet is a top priority for Roughead. The trip served to deepen Roughead's understanding of the shipbuilding industry and help inform shipbuilding decisions.

"It is vitally important that I have up-to-date, first-hand knowledge of the latest developments, technological advances, and infrastructure improvements in the shipyards," Roughead explained.

"Shipbuilding is complex, and the decisions I'll make regarding it are critically important to the future of the Navy," Roughead added.

The eight-day trip also included visits to Portsmouth Shipyard

(Portsmouth, N.H.); Bath Iron Works (Brunswick, Maine); three Northrop Grumman Ship Systems sites to include: Ingalls (Pascagoula, Miss.), Avondale (New Orleans, La.) and Gulfport (Gulfport, Miss.); Austal USA Shipbuilding (Mobile, Ala.), and National Steel and Shipbuilding Company (San Diego).

This visit will also play a larger role as CNO emphasizes his commitment to making the Navy a "Top 50" workplace. On this trip and in those of the future, Roughead will meet with Sailors, Navy civilians and family members, as well as business leaders and educators to help define the Navy's way ahead and integrate change, as needed.

"I'm a firm believer that if you don't walk the ground, you will not have a good sense of what's going on," Roughead said.

GTMO goes to the dogs

Story By MC1 Robert Lamb

NAVSTA Public Affairs

Mans best friend comes in all shapes and sizes, but do they all have what it takes to be the big dog on campus?

On Jan. 27, from 3 – 5 p.m. at Brandon Field, located across from Zaiser Field, members of the 2008 Navy Ball Committee will be hosting an “Every dog has his day event.” Kind of a talent show slash obedience contest for canines. The idea for this is to show off your talented pooch and see if he or she has what it takes to be the fastest, biggest, smallest or most obedient dog in town.

“This is a day solely for the dogs, says Electronics Technician 1st Class (SW/AW) Michael Schiltz. “There will be 10 different competitions that the owners can enter the dogs in. The owners will have to keep the dogs on a leash for safety reasons with the exception of the fastest dog and agility course. The fastest dog competition will consist of a predetermined dis-ance so the owner will have to cheer on and encourage their dog to run their fastest.”

Even if your particular hound doesn’t fall under the guidelines of the American Kennel Club [AKC] they can be entered into the cutest, owner look alike, ugliest, best coat of hair portion of the day. The competition is not based on size or shape or the willingness to conduct themselves in an orderly fashion, it’s all to have a wonderful time.

“I look at it as a fun Olympics for the dogs. I encourage ALL dog owners to bring their dogs. If the owner does not feel they have a shot at placing in the competitions I encourage them to bring out their dog just to enjoy a day out that they may have not had in a while during the busy schedules,” added Schiltz.

Many dogs that currently live in Guantanamo Bay probably don’t have the desire to demonstrate their willingness to work with their owner like the dogs that are used at NAVSTA Security Department, but the average family pet might not have the agility or the concentration to negotiate an obstacle course or possibly race against a clock.

Participants are often arranged in classes to equalize the competition for all sizes of dogs.

“The owners will enter their dogs into different competitions which they will be eventually judged. The owners really just need to maintain control of their dogs, especially in the beginning. I would hope to find out that all the dogs will get along and enjoy each others company. The owners will get a chance to see different breeds they have not seen or did not know were on base and hopefully enjoy the day out with their dogs,” said Schiltz.

This is my second trip here in the last 24 months and the joint capability has truly delivered for our nation.”

Mullen praised GTMO’s role in fulfilling ‘jointness’ – one of the key principles he implemented to the Joint Chiefs of Staff’s for fulfilling his strategic objectives.

“The naval station here has grown although there have been challenges supporting the very challenging, vital JTF mission. NAVSTA has done great work and I am very proud of everyone here,” said Mullen.

In closing, Mullen stressed the importance of diversity, change and leadership to the audience.

“Leadership and diversity in the military are key. Pay attention to it and take care of it because it will make us a better military,” said Mullen.

Mullen and his wife Deborah also conducted a spouses call during their visit to GTMO.

Servicemembers and their spouses were given the opportunity to participate in a question and answer session about quality of life issues here in GTMO and Navy-wide.

The briefing was held at the home of NAVSTA Commanding Officer Capt. Mark Leary.

MWR CYP employees pursue higher education

Story by Aminah Abdullah

GTMO CYP

Representatives from the Council for Professional Recognition visited the Guantanamo Bay, Cuba MWR Child Development Center Jan. 13 – 18 to assess child development staff for the Child Development Associates Credential (CDA).

The CDA offers the Child & Youth Caregivers the opportunity to earn a professional credential that is recognized by early childhood educators nationwide. A CDA credential is awarded to a person who demonstrates competencies in caring for young children by successfully completing the CDA assessment process.

“Achieving CDA credential motivates the staff to further enhance their knowledge and skills in the field early childhood field. The initial credential is for 3 years and then can be possibly renewed for 5 years,” said Lolita Gunter, CDA Training and Curriculum Specialist.

The representatives played a significant role in the final step in the process of earning the CDA credential. During the visit, the Council Representatives administered the early childhood Studies Review (Exam) a 60 question exam, conducted individual interviews (where the candidate are asked 10 oral questions) and collected Parent Questionnaires to take back to the Council for Professional Recognition.

“It is always a pleasure and privilege to assess the candidates because I know the amount of work that goes in preparing for the process. I feel strongly that part of my job is to help them feel comfortable so they can go through their assessment with confidence. It is a joy to hear from the candidates when they have obtained their credentials,” said Maureen Salemi, a Lead Training Curriculum Specialist from Fort Meade, Md.

Candidates are also required to complete a resource binder with 16 collected resources. The CDA credential can go with the caregivers wherever they go.

“The whole CDA process was challenging. The process was hard work, however, I learned a lot about child care. It was a great experience,” said Jahlecia Nelson, Child Development Center, Lead Caregiver.

Corelle Street, parent of two children at the Child Development Center had a positive perception of what the program means for the candidates from a parental point of view.

“I think it is very good for the caregivers. The CDA will increase their knowledge. Caregivers who increase their knowledge demonstrate to me that they are not just caregivers;

the individuals are committed to the field of child development,” said Street.

“It is a joy to hear from the candidates when they have obtained their credentials,” she added

“I am so very proud of the effort and work that our caregivers have put into this process. While, they have worked very hard, they are also excited and understand the importance of obtaining a Child Development Associates credential. They are also working on their Associates Degree at the University of Cincinnati. MWR is very committed to the progress and education of the staff we employ,” said Terrill D. Wicks, GTMO CYP.

Local songstress serenades open mic audience

Story By MC1 Robert Lamb

NAVSTA Public Affairs

Imagine sitting in a dimly lit, smoked filled ballroom in San Francisco in the early 1960's. The dance floor is covered by large round tables, four chairs per piece, lit only by candlelight. Four primary colored stage lights focused on a woman who is all alone on stage and singing American standards, while patrons sit silently, staring and dreaming of a lost love or a loved one sitting beside them.

For two hours Kia Graham, a local contractor, sang her heart out at the Windjammer Ballroom Jan. 11.

The music she sang was soulful, bluesy, intimate and for some audience members a quite soothing.

"The audience was treated to a combination of pop, blues, gospel and country songs along with several of Kia's original compositions. Kia's blend of smoky smooth vocals and command of the stage gained and held everyone's total attention throughout the two set show," said John Tickner

"Kia sings from the heart. She brings the audience with her on a journey of emotions. She can make you laugh, cry, sway and sing-along with her all in one set," said Dianne Tiano.

"She was mesmerizing and had a calming effect on the audience," said Karissa Sandstrom. "It was a joy to watch her."

Kia Graham is not shy when it comes to singing. If Rick's Lounge, located at the Bayview, is holding a Karaoke night you might be able to catch Kia singer there as well. Kia's voice is definitely not new to Guantanamo Bay (GTMO). She's been singing here for years.

"My music is pretty personal to me, and thus sharing it with everyone is very personal," said Kia Graham. "The first time was October of 2005, when I was still here as a Sergeant in the military [Army]. I sang at the Windjammer for almost 2 hours, and had a great time. It was pretty relaxed, like an "MTV-Unplugged", she replied.

The songs may have been familiar to some people in the audience, but the voice is all her own. She seems to be very comfortable on stage and has a connection to her audience.

"I've been singing since I was a kid. I've taken choir in school, but I never had any professional training or anything. I just like to sing," she added.

Kia still gets nervous when she performs, but admits that being nervous might be a good thing.

"I always get nervous when I sing. Somebody once told me that getting nervous just means that you want to do your best, and that if you ever stop getting nervous then you have lost the passion for what you do. I relax a little after a song or two, but yeah, I have to admit I am a little shaky at the beginning."

She's no stranger to singing for big crowds either. She sang the National Anthem at the Filipino Independence Day Celebration for the past two years in a row, and for the GTMO African American Association.

So what does the future hold for Kia Graham?

"Well, I plan to leave here soon to further my career and attend a few more military schools, so this will be my last official performance here on island. I have people constantly asking me to sing, or come out to karaoke, so I figured I'd please every request in one concert, she answered. "I have been told, begged, and suggested many times that I should try out for American Idol, but that opportunity has not yet been a possibility in my chaotic schedule thus far. Maybe someday I will record my music and try to get into the music industry, but it is not my main focus right now. I love to sing, and enjoy it as a hobby, but that is all I have time for right now. Although, I would hate to leave this world regretting that I never tried to pursue my passion for music."
