NAVSTA selects 2007 Sailor of the Year

viation Electronics Technician 1st Class (AW/SW) Matthew J. Murcin was born July 18, 1971 in Buffalo, N.Y.

He graduated from West Seneca West Senior High in 1989 and attended Buffalo State College until 1992.

Murcin enlisted in the U.S. Navy in 1994.

After completing recruit training in Great Lakes he attended Aviation Electronics Technician "A" school at NATTC Millington, Tenn. and then completed GCAMS calibration 'C' school at NAMTRAGRUDET, Norfolk.

In July 1995, Murcin reported to the calibration laboratory at AIMD NAS Oceana, Va. He was part of the regionalization from an AIMD calibration lab to the Mid-Atlantic Regional Calibration Laboratory. During this tour, he was advanced to petty officer third class.

His next command was AIMD NAS Keflavik, Iceland. En route he successfully graduated from Advanced Calibration "C" school at Kessler AFB in Biloxi, Miss. and reported on board February 1998.

While in Iceland, Murcin was advanced to petty officer second class and took over as the calibration lab work center supervisor.

Soon after, he transferred to the USS John F. Kennedy (CV-67) in August 2000. He assumed duties as production supervisor and eventually became the only second class petty officer assigned to the quality assurance division. While on board, Murcin earned both his Enlisted Aviation Warfare Specialist and Enlisted Surface Warfare Specialist designations.

In September 2002 Murcin transferred to the Southeast Regional Calibration Center at NAS Jacksonville. Here he was advanced to petty officer first class and was designated the onsite calibration leading petty officer (LPO).

Additionally, during this tour, he successfully completed 2M micro/miniature repair "C" school.

In 2004, Murcin applied for a special program billet at Naval Station (NAVSTA) Guantanamo Bay, Cuba. After completing Ships 3-M system coordinator school at FTC Norfolk, Va., he reported to NAVSTA in February 2005.

Murcin serves currently as the NAVSTA 3M/Calibration coordinator and is the LPO of operations department. In addition to various unit citations and ribbons, he has received the Navy Achievement Medal (five awards) and the Good Conduct Medal (four awards).

He is accompanied in GTMO by his wife Christina and two children: Caleb and Selena.

"There are so many outstanding first class petty officers on the base. It is a great honor [for me to have been] selected as the SOY."

Fiscal Year 2009 DoD Budget Released

From the Department of Defense

WASHINGTON (NNS) — President George W. Bush sent to Congress his Defense budget for fiscal year (FY) 2009 on 4 Feb.

The budget provides $515.4 billion in discretionary authority for the Department of Defense, a $35.9 billion or 7.5 percent increase over the enacted level for FY 2008.

The FY 2009 budget reflects the president's priorities and sustains his commitment to prevail in the war on terrorism; increase ground combat capabilities; improve force readiness; develop the combat capabilities needed to meet future threats; and improve the quality of life for service members and their families.

Defense Secretary Robert M. Gates said, "The president's budget for FY 2009 provides the resources necessary to maintain an agile, highly trained, and lethal fighting force, increase Army and Marine Corps end strength, and sustain the United States' technological advantage over current and

Outstanding Service

On Feb. 1, personal financial manager Paul Walker received his well deserved Letter of Appreciation from NAVSTA Commanding Officer Capt Leary in a ceremony held at FFSC. The Walker family have been residents of GTMO for eight years.

Paul, an avid fisherman and professional financial educator, will be missed by all. While assigned to the FFSC, Paul assisted thousands of servicemembers and their families through various aspects of financial counseling. Walker has also been commended for his work with JTF and has instructed classes on home buying, automobile purchasing and the Military Thrift Savings Plan. Some other duties assigned to Walker during his stint with FFSC include the Transition Assistance Program, Family Employment Readiness Program and ensuring the center was able to pass its accreditation inspection in 2005.

Walker's co-workers and friends wish Paul and his family a safe journey home. We all will miss you and appreciate the services you provided during your stay at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba.

Sailors sound off about parenth ood in the Navy

NAVSTA PAO

It's 3 a.m. and you've just managed to lay down on your bed in attempt to get some much needed sleep. Your body is exhausted from the lack of rest and abundance of activity it has been subjected to for the past six weeks. You roll over with one eye slightly open and peek at your clock in despair knowing that in three short hours a new day begins and you get to do it all over again.

Given all of these seemingly negative things, you're ok with your current state of being because you're a parent and it comes with the territory.

Many Sailors deal with the responsibility of being servicemembers and parents. Some are married and have the support of a spouse, some are geographical bachelors and are away from their entire family and some are single parents and go at it alone. They all share one thing in common-the unconditional love and responsibility they have to provide to their families.

So how does a Sailor handle being a member of the world's greatest navy and being the world's greatest mom or dad? Not as differently as many think.

Many parents explain that they use friends and family members as a support system to help out when they are called to deploy, work late or perform military duties outside of daycare hours of operation.

Some parents believe though that remote, overseas locations such as GTMO should adjust the rules for allowing family members or nannies to provide live-in childcare.

"We [parents] should be authorized to bring a nanny or a family member to lighten the load that childcare issues bring," said Master at Arms 2nd Class Desiree Rivers, separated mother of a two and nine-year old. "My mom is here visiting for a month and if I could bring her down [to GTMO] to live with me full time as my nanny, I would never run into another childcare issue again. That would be heaven," said Rivers.

"I think [the Navy] should come up with some kind of homestead program/policy for those who have children in high school. It is very difficult for children and parents to move when they are established in their community and school," said married father of two teenagers and geographic bachelor Chief Master at Arms (SW) Eric Bollar. "Children need their parents available to them throughout their high school career. The entire burden of raising children should not be placed on the [civilian] spouse's shoulders when dealing with parenthood because it is a 50/50 agreement," said Bollar.

Homesteading or staying in one location for the duration of your career is a common desire that many Sailors believe the Navy should adopt as policy.

Another common concern among many parents is the time away from their children lost when they are temporarily assigned to a different location than their home, or deployed for longer periods of time, like an unaccompanied PCS.

"Being away from them [children] is the hardest part for me. I love watching my daughter grow and when I have to miss something it really affects me," said Master at Arms 3rd Class Symboline Spann, single parent of one daughter. "I have missed out [on so many of my daughter's milestones] being in the military, but it gives me a better way to be able to support my daughter," said Spann.

""I've been blessed when you look at it from the perspective of what other military parents have had to go through, but that being said, the extra hours [that we have to put in] when regular child care isn't available make it extremely difficult to be [a parent] in the military," said Utilitiesman 2nd Class Rachael Thompson, single mother of a four-year old. "I'm TAD and don't have to stand duty for two months and that first Saturday morning that I didn't have to wake up, put on the uniform, get her [my daughter] up and dressed, take her to a sitter and go muster at 7:30 a.m. or arrange for someone to pick her up from the CDC because they are closing and I'm still standing watch. This made a huge difference in our relationship that I didn't realize until now," said Thompson.

While there are hardships associated with being in the military, parents do have advice as to how to cope with these obstacles.

"Being attached to a deployable unit is very challenging. The Military is very unforgiving in today's Optempo, but if you are fortunate enough to be attached to non-deployable units it can be a lot easier," said Electronics Technician 1st Class Jerry Ramm, single father of three. "Nevertheless, meeting duty and shift work necessities requires logistical flexibility, but it is the life the family becomes accustomed to and they don't know any different kind of life. It is their norm and they don't perceive it the least bit odd," said Ramm.

"I stay active and try to participate in as many activities as possible with my daughter," said Aviation Mechanic 2nd Class (AW) Tinashe Chigumira, married mother of one daughter. "I take time for myself to clear my mind by going to the gym to relieve everyday stress. Our family makes a lot of expensive phone calls back to the states to talk to family members and to get advice about how to cope with being away from the ones we love," said Chigumira.

Talking to the chaplain, a therapist or a friend can also be a source of solace for many weary parents.

To make things easier during unforeseen situations, the Navy requires Sailors to provide a family care plan, which aids them in planning the care of dependants.

The Navy recently released guidance to ease some of the headaches that come with being a new parent in the military, including longer times of rest prior to going on deployment for new mothers. This information can be found in the Navy Guidelines Concerning Pregnancy and Parenthood at www.npc.navy.mil.

McCarthy's kick up heels at O'Kelly's

Story by MC1 Robert Lamb

NAVSTA PAO

Whether you wore a kilt or just a smile at the grand opening of O'Kelly's Irish Pub you had to be impressed with the transformation of that part of the Windjammer. O'Kelly's opened Saturday night, Feb. 2, to a packed crowd of locals and well wishers, all of whom were greeted by a traditional "bagpiper" and music from various genres on the entire island of Ireland.

The totally remodeled Acey Deucey Club was designed to look like an old fashioned Irish Public House(Pub). The name O'Kelly's was in honor of long time Guantanamo Bay (GTMO) resident and regular bartender, Kelly Garland, who also works at the W.T. Sampson High School. Garland was extremely impressed with the large turnout of support that he and the pub received that night.

"I'm honored that my fellow co-workers from MWR would name a bar after me," said Garland. "Or it just means I have been in GTMO way too long! I was very pleased that many of my closest friends were able to come that night. I hope to see them in the pub more often in the future," he added.

Speaking of an extremely impressive evening, what about the McCarthy clan, who wore their Irish heritage on their sleeves, or their shoulders, and gave us all a night to remember. The clan consists of Mr. and Mrs. Capt. Patrick McCarthy, Dee Dee, Eryn, Patrick Jr. Aidan and Seamus. They all had a part in the opening night festivities. They were accompanied by a band out of the Annapolis, Md. area, called 'Off The Boat' with James Gallagher as the lead vocalist.

Eldest child, Dee Dee, who's an expert on Irish history, was trying her best all night long to teach the crowd a little about her proud heritage. Her familiarity and knowledge of traditional Irish songs was a great help to those who wished to sing along. The crowd sang and clapped their way through some of the most traditional Irish dirges that GTMO has ever heard.

"My wife Dee and I are extremely

'Off the Boat' regularly praised the troops and the United States Armed Services from the stage. They could not stop talking about how great the base residents were.

proud of our children," the McCarthy patriarch said.

Eryn, who's a W.T. Sampson High School senior and an accomplished Irish Step Dancer, had all the Irish eyes upon her as she danced to the traditional music.

"Audiences are usually never quite sure what to do when I start dancing; most people have never ever heard of Irish Dancing, but after a step or two, they get a little more comfortable, and really seem to enjoy it," said Eryn.

Eryn has been dancing since she was 11 years old and choreographed the dances herself for this occasion. Her dream is to become a champion in the art of Irish Step Dancing.

"One very special thing about the opening night was that I didn't dance by myself, my brothers were also up there with me," she added.

Not to be outdone by the lasses and also to make it a family affair, the boys (Patrick, Aidan and Seamus) learned a step or two from their sister and also sang along with their mom and dad during the

History 'buff' says good-bye to GTMO

At some point in our lives we all get a chance to give back to our community or our country, but at what expense do we give? Some people donate financially and some people donate their lives to a worthwhile cause. One Guantanamo Bay (GTMO) resident donated a great portion of his time here to researching the history of GTMO.

Mr. Pete Becola used his interest in history to occupy his free time by educating others and searching out the facts about GTMO. On any given weekend, with command authorization, Pete could be seen taking visitors to places everyday individuals are restricted from seeing, such as the Cuzco Well Battle site.

"During the roughly year and a half of visitations I (Pete) estimate around 150 total personnel have visited the hilltop where the machine gun emplacement was during the Battle of Cuzco Well," Becola said.

This was the area of the very first victorious battle for the Americans back in 1898, during the Spanish-American War. According to Naval Historical Center, two companies of U.S. Marines (about 160 men) under Capt. G.F. Elliot, with 50 Cubans under Colonel Thomas, approached Cuzco along the cliffs by the sea, while a smaller Marine force advanced by an inland valley, holding a picket line for the main force, with men in reserve to go to its assistance if necessary.

The importance of this area was that Cuzco Well, located about six miles southeast of Camp McCalla and near the coast, was the only water supply for the Spanish forces in the vicinity. Getting up to this site is not as easy as one may think.

Searching the site of the nearly 110 year old battle was also not easy.

"The physical demands of climbing the steep hills out at Cuzco and working in the heat without overhead cover or shade were most demanding," said Becola. "To overcome this, I limited all visitations to three hours. Although I would drink up to a gallon of fluids during this time frame I would still lose between three and five pounds in water weight."

GTMO can be a very difficult place to retrieve or uncover historical facts or events. Official records may have been misplaced or actual accounts of times and places may have been handed down from generation to generation and may not be accurate. Some of the historical facts that Becola has found may in fact be incorrect in some published accounts of GTMO.

"The main discovery is that we have placed the Spanish forces in a different location than was previously thought by historical writers. Stephen Crane (American novelist), who was with American forces during the Spanish American War, wrote two differing accounts of the battle", said Becola. "In the first account, he wrote that there was a mad dash for the hill by the Marines and the Spanish forces, but the Marines reached the top and drove the Spanish back down the hill. Acouple of years later Crane wrote a differing account in which he said that all heck broke out and that Spanish bullets were falling all around the Marines. I believe both accounts Crane wrote were believed by him to be accurate at the time. My hypothesis is that Crane was not aware that the forces had changed directions and had changed course. I believe that after his first account was published; one or more Marines contacted Crane and reported his initial error, so Crane wrote a new, more accurate, account."

These findings may seem slight and trivial to some people, but finding accurate accounts of small battles and the whereabouts of troops can lead to bigger and more significant findings later on. Mr. Becola hasn't sent off his finding to any historical center, he preferredd to collect as much as he could and then send it off at a later time.

Pete Becola has left GTMO recently. He's transferring back to the states and all the research he has collected will be handed over to the Naval Station Environmental Department and the Naval Station Public Affairs Office.

"Since my research began, I've been able to relate more to GTMO and have become more fascinated with the historical background here. "I also wanted to give people a better appreciation for what GTMO stands for, because it's more than just a detention center," said Becola.

"Staff Sgt. Marshall Morey, U.S. Marine Corps Security Force Company, has expressed the desire to continue the research work now that I've left our paradise. MA1 Andrew Duncan, who has been of the greatest assistance to me during our ventures and research, would also like to continue the work. I also want to thank everyone for the support given to the project during my tenure here. It was a true pleasure working with each and every one of you. God Bless all of you and your families.

Environmental Quality Team recognized

By MC1 Robert Lamb

NAVSTA PAO

Naval Station Guantanamo Bay (GTMO) was recently awarded the Chief of Naval Operations (CNO) Environmental Award for the second time in the last three years.

The award recognizes individuals, teams, ships and installations for their exceptional environmental stewardship. In the category of Environmental Individual or Team Award: GTMO's Environmental Quality Team came out ahead.

Fred Burns, who was the NAVSTAEnvironmental Director at the time, remarked that GTMO as a community played a part in this award.

"There has been a general improvement in the awareness of the environment by all residents taking pride in their temporary home in GTMO. After 2005, we raised our environmental standards well above the minimum required at GTMO because it was the right thing to do and it took about a year to meet our new expectations," said Burns.

Throughout the years, the environmental department staff has been visited by geologists, pale-ontologists and many other environmentally educated and conscious visitors.

Researchers from here and back in the states have done many studies that have included coral reef surveys, reptile research and even avian bird flu studies.

"Our regular Cuban Boa and reptile visitor Dr. Peter Tolson, who will be coming back to GTMO in Feb., has always been a great source of knowledge to GTMO," said Burns.

By removing debris, such as old tires, GTMO has made a huge impact on the ecosystem here. Tires piled up at the landfill attract mosquitoes, which may carry dengue fever. In 2007 the Environmental Department removed more than 20,000 tires from the local landfill.

Cleaning up the base on a regular basis helps, but having a better recycling program helps not only in the short term, but the long term as well. The recycling program here exceeds, in the type and quantity, that of many communities back in the states.

"We started a demonstration project to produce very small batches of biodiesel. This will now be part of our local school's science curriculum. Many thanks go out to personnel at the NAVSTA Brig, the GTMO Fire Department and others for all the volunteering they do," Burns said. "As the former environmental director, the award really belongs to the ENV staff for doing more than the minimum and making my job easier. They continually came up with improvements from recycling to hazardous waste management, I just had to figure out where to get the funding,"

"I would especially like to thank Shawn Lewis and Noel Grey for making this happen. And to thank our leadership for their support of our projects and program, the contractors and residents for their recycling efforts, and especially our volunteers." said Chris Creighton, Environmental Compliance Program Manager. "What it says about GTMO and its environment is that we are all fortunate to live in a pristine paradise and it's obvious by the collective effort of every individual here that it is appreciated."

Chief of Naval Operations (CNO) Environmental Readiness Division Director, Rear Adm. Larry Rice, called Environmental Department personnel 'Superstars'.

"Your environmental stewardship is an integral part of our Navy's operations and is critical in preserving our ability to ensure our operating forces are trained and ready to perform their missions. This is the opportunity to show off your programs," remarked Rice.

Bringing GTMO into the 21st Century takes the cooperation of residents, contractors and visitors. The achievements that have been made can go even further.

Wind, solar and even biodiesel power, which is being used already here on a small scale, can put money in the pockets of our government and all citizens.

All CNO winners will advance to the Secretary of the Navy (SECNAV) Environmental Awards competition. SECNAV winners will advance to the Secretary of Defense (SECDEF) competition in all categories except the Environmental Quality-Large Ship category which has no equivalent at the SECDEF competition level.

A ceremony honoring the CNO Environmental Award winners will be held June 3, 2008 at 9:00 a.m., at the U.S. Navy Memorial & Naval Heritage Center in Washington, D.C., and will be followed at 11:00 a.m., by the SECNAV Environmental Awards ceremony.

The SECDEF ceremony will be held June 4, 2008 at 11 a.m., in the Pentagon Auditorium.

Tax filing woes eased for GTMO residents

Story by NAVSTA Public Affairs

Navy Legal Services (NLSO) can now help ease the inherent hassles of tax filing with their free Tax Center services.

"We handle all tax services such as filing 1040EZ (normally single filers), 1040A (those with dependants), and 1040's, those which are more specific because of itemized deductions," said Legalman 1st Class ReAnn Myers, NLSO

As with anyone who is filing their tax return, preparation is a necessity for a quick and efficient return. Just because someone else is preparing the taxes doesn't mean the tax filer doesn't need to be prepared as well.

"The hardest part for people is getting all their documents in order," added Myers. "The important thing is to bring the proper paperwork along with a base or military ID card. I know people really want to get their taxes done quickly, but if you don't have the proper information it's just going to hold the process up."

The proper collection of documents is also imperative for those who are itemizing.

"If you are itemizing, have your paperwork in order," says Myers. "Come in with a comprehensive list of your deductions. Don't try to come up with figures off the top of your head. It will only hurt a taxpayer in the end."

Myers reminds filers that it's their job to verify the information they provide once the preparer has completed the paperwork.

"Make sure the social security numbers of your family members are correct," continued Myers. "And don't assume we typed in all your information correctly. Check and make sure the numbers and information are correct because one little number can cause your tax return to be kicked back."

Myers believes in the benefits these tax services provide GTMO residents.

"Our services are free and everyone here is trained by the IRS," said Myers. "Back in the states, you would have to pay. Since the returns are E-filed, it's quick and fast. You normally have your return within a week."

Filing for a spouse if they aren't on-island is another issue filers need to take into consideration.

"If you are filing jointly and your spouse is off-island, you must have an original power of attorney stating you are allowed to file their taxes for them. Additionally, you are not considered head of household, unless your spouse is a non-resident alien."

Myers also wants to remind junior servicemembers to take advantage of these services.

"We really offer these services to meet the needs of our junior personnel," says Myers. "Most of them don't have a lot of experience with tax filing, and even though they fall in an easier filing category, it's good for them to understand how the whole process works."

Tax services are available at the NLSO office Bldg. 760, which started on Feb. 4. Appointments are available on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays between 9 a.m. 3:30 p.m. Services are offered by appointment only and the phone to make an appointment is 4314.

The Joint Task Force Tax Center is also open Monday through Friday, also by appointment only.

They can be reached at 8134, located in Bldg. A6208, behind the Trooper's Chapel.

"I really enjoy it when other people join in, it adds to the energy to the dance," said Eryn.

Any event that combines music, dancing, good conversation among family and friends has to be a hit. And having a place that reminds you of home will always be a good place to be.

During the evening when people were asked about the new look of the place the one continuous response was that it made people feel that they were back in the states.

"I would like to thank Capt. Leary and Craig Basel for having the foresight to envision this concept. It really shows what the facilities in GTMO can look like. What a team they make! O'Kelly's is a tremendous addition to the variety of entertainment in Guantanamo," McCarthy said.

The McCarthy's clan consists of Mr. and Mrs. Capt. Patrick McCarthy, Dee Dee, Eryn, Patrick Jr. Aidan and Seamus.

"Saturday night made me feel like I was at home. It was fantastic to bring the sounds of Ireland to GTMO, and even more fantastic to see the residents of the Naval Station, whether JTF, NAVBASE, Hospital, contractor, civilian employee, or dependent, react so positively to the entire experience.

There is no doubt that O'Kelly's will be a mainstay here for years to come."

The Golden Compass
7 p.m., PG13, 100 min.

Hitman, R, 127 min.

The film opens with a montage shows a group of bald, blue-eyed boys receiving tattoos of bar codes and then shows them being instructed in the use of firearms and martial arts. Interpol agent Mike Whittier discovers Agent 47 in his study, where the two talk briefly. The scene flashes back 3 months, as 47 is completing a hit in St. Petersburg, Russia.

Cloverfield: PG13, 84 min.

The action begins with a view of Central Park at dawn from a Columbus Circle apartment taken via a hand-held camera point of view. The timestamp is April 27, 6:41am. Rob Hawkins (Michael Stahl-David) describes the scene and then goes into the bedroom where he talks to Beth (Odette Yustman). They plan a trip to Coney Island.
