2,000 years ago, Judaism was becoming an attractive product in the market of Mediterranean religions. Yet it was Christianity that won the day. Innovation anthropologist Dominique Desjeux offers an unexpected solution to this oft-revisited enigma. In the year 70, the Temple of Jerusalem was destroyed. The Jews were in danger of disappearing, even though they represented nearly 8% of the empire's population. To survive, the Jews had to make a strategic choice between several controversies: the resurrection of the dead, proselytism, the application of circumcision and dietary prohibitions.

One school of thought proposed refocusing on the purity of rules. This later gave rise to Rabbinical Judaism. Another Jewish current favored globalization. It proposed a religious product that was easier to disseminate. It did away with circumcision and kashrut, included eternal life, which reassured against the uncertainties of the future, and baptism, which simplified the rituals of purification. This current was excluded from synagogues. A few centuries later, it gave rise to Christianity. Any resemblance to today's innovations and crises is not accidental.

Dominique Desjeux, anthropologist, is professor emeritus at Université Paris Cité, Sorbonne humanities. After working with M. Crozier, A. Touraine and G. Balandier, he has carried out contract research since 1969 in China, the USA, Brazil, Europe and Africa. He has published numerous works on consumption, energy, mobility, innovations and decisions in organizations and domestic space. He has been a director of collections at L'Harmattan and PUF.

Vor dem Hintergrund zunehmender Relevanz von Nachhaltigkeit als shopperseitig wahrgenommenem Qualitätsfaktor im filialisierten, stationären Lebensmitteleinzelhandel in Deutschland erarbeitet die Autorin die begriffliche, konzeptuelle und explorativ-empirische Konkretisierung des Konstrukts Nachhaltigkeitsqualität. Dies geschieht konzeptionell durch Adaption und Erweiterung des GAP-Modells der Dienstleistungsqualität als GAP-Modell der Nachhaltigkeitsqualität und explorativ-empirisch mittels Fokusgruppendifkussionen, Website-Analysen und Experteninterviews. Neben der inhaltlichen Strukturierung durch Dimensionen und Merkmale werden nicht nur Anknüpfungspunkt für die Entwicklung einer zugehörigen Skala, sondern auch konkrete Empfehlungen für Handelsmanager aufgezeigt. Die Arbeit dient damit sowohl der Erschließung eines überaus relevanten und gleichzeitig bisher unzureichend untersuchten Forschungsfelds als auch dem effektiven Management von Nachhaltigkeitsqualität im dt. LEH.

This collection of articles brings readers' attention to "failed leadership" aspects encompassing business, political, social, philosophical, psychological and historical perspectives by presented an international group of authors, ranging from academicians to business practitioners. The reader will find both advanced theoretical analyses as well as descriptions of real-life cases of failed leadership across time and different geographies. El presente libro realiza un análisis de la pobreza multidimensional y de las desigualdades persistentes en los pueblos indígenas que habitan Medellín y, en comunidades que habitan el territorio rural disperso en Colombia, con foco en el departamento de Vaupés. En el caso de Medellín, llama la atención que dicha pobreza se vive al interior de una ciudad pujante, pero no ajena a las dinámicas de altísima desigualdad y a los mecanismos causales subyacentes en este fenómeno en el contexto latinoamericano. En cuanto al territorio rural disperso, la autopercepción de la pobreza es coherente con la heterogeneidad que hay en los grupos sociales. El análisis de la pobreza y la desigualdad pluriétnica es desafiante, por ende, se deben vincular sus causas y develar algunos mecanismos estructurales y persistentes en los indígenas. Algunos de estos mecanismos están aunados a hechos y realidades en el territorio de origen y a las rupturas entre las dinámicas de lo rural y lo urbano.

For decades now, the Asian region has been in the process of transforming from a manufacturing center of the global economy to an innovation booster for the knowledge and digital economy. Asia has emerged as an innovation powerhouse. Among Asian economies, the East Asia region has made great efforts to stimulate investment in innovation through numerous support policies aimed at fostering R&D investment, developing innovation ecosystems (in particular to support startups), training a high performance workforce, and strengthening academy-industry-government collaboration. These efforts have resulted in "economic miracles", transforming the East Asian region into home to some of the world's largest economies.

This book provides a detailed overview of the determinants of innovation systems in East Asia, including efforts from academia, industry, and government, as well as the evolution of innovation models towards sustainable development.

Die von der Weltgesundheitsorganisation als COVID-19 bezeichnete Atemwegserkrankung entwickelte sich zu einer globalen Pandemie. Fast alle Länder und Regionen auf der Welt und Millionen von Menschen waren betroffen. Es kam zu einer Gesundheitskrise, wie es sie seit hundert Jahren nicht gegeben hat. Durch die Pandemie wurde ein enormer Schock für die Wirtschaft ausgelöst. Sowohl einzelne Länder als auch die Welt insgesamt mussten von ihrem bisherigen Entwicklungspfad abweichen, mit schweren Folgen für Wirtschaft und Gesellschaft. Sowohl in Bezug auf die Bewältigung der Pandemie selbst als auch hinsichtlich der Wiederbelebung der Wirtschaft musste sich China auf einen „Dauerkrieg“ einstellen, um entsprechende Reaktionspläne zu erarbeiten und umzusetzen. L'art exerce une influence importante sur le secteur touristique et son développement, tout comme le tourisme a parallèlement participé au développement et à l'enrichissement du secteur artistique.

Cet ouvrage pluridisciplinaire se propose de fusionner ces deux interactions et d'étudier le lien entre tourisme, arts et territoires en une réflexion collective structurée en deux grandes parties. La première partie se propose d'étudier de quelle manière des productions artistiques sont devenues des vecteurs touristiques et culturels à travers des études de cas portant sur différentes formes d'art et différents territoires (France, Grande-Bretagne, USA...).

La seconde partie se propose d'appréhender comment des territoires mettent en oeuvre des stratégies visant à développer de nouvelles productions artistiques afin d'accroître leur attractivité touristique et soutenir leur développement socio-économique. Les contributions rassemblées permettent de proposer un ouvrage pluridisciplinaire mêlant approches conceptuelles et opérationnelles.

Aujourd'hui, la nécessité d'un programme de recherche sur les cycles économiques dans les pays en développement se pose avec acuité. L'ouverture de plus en plus importante de ces pays, leur exposition différenciée aux chocs externes, l'inefficience de leurs dispositifs institutionnels et les échecs récurrents dans la gestion des crises par des politiques économiques appropriées, sont autant de facteurs qui penchent en faveur d'une recherche approfondie sur les causes des cycles économiques, sur leurs effets potentiels ainsi que sur les mesures qui doivent être mises en oeuvre pour atténuer leurs risques.

Ce livre apporte un éclairage sur les cycles économiques dans les pays en développement, en articulant, à la fois, des analyses théoriques et des outils méthodologiques. [...] Click here to read more.

The oft-used phrase 'Money makes the world go round' not only highlights the purely economic nature of money but also underscores its significant implications for politics, society, and humanity. It is, therefore, unsurprising that the subject of money is also addressed in religious doctrines. This book aims to present the Catholic Church's official stance on money, as articulated in the papal social encyclicals. The popes are less concerned with monetary theories or abstract considerations about money, but rather with its use and the resulting consequences for both the community and the individual. Social encyclicals serve as a critical lens to analyze the role of money in contemporary society. Money, in itself, is neither inherently good nor bad; it must assume the status of a means and cannot function as an end in itself.

The aim of this edited collection is to bridge the gap between advanced research methods and models and the main fields of economic research by presenting a collection of articles demonstrating the applicability of new research methods to a wide range of current economic topics, including, but not limited to, mathematical modelling of financial market behavior, modeling in corporate finance and management and modeling of macroeconomic issues. The book is a collection of 12 theoretical and empirical research papers that present novel results from modeling current economic phenomena using a logical, behavioral, institutional and quantitative approach, as well as provide researchers with useful and practical knowledge in the examination of economic phenomena.

Since the Reform and Opening up, China's economy has maintained high growth rates, known as the 'Chinese growth miracle'. Over this period, the stability of economic growth has also gradually improved. According to Lin Jianhao and Wang Jinmei (2013), Since 1996, the Chinese economy has been oscillating between relative volatility and relative stability achieving a kind of 'overall stability'. By contrast, consumption rate, the most important measure of the national economic welfare and of the stabilizing effects of steady economic growth, has declined year by year between 1978 and 2016. What does this mean for the role of consumption in China's long-term economic growth? Is there an optimal consumption rate, under which the economy can achieve long-term steady growth? What is the optimal consumption rate for China? Is the optimal consumption rate conducive to sustainable economic growth? These are some of the important theoretical and practical questions to be answered in this book.

Digitalization, a formative factor in the education sector, is in the interest of educational research. It also enables new teaching and learning methods and requires skills from those involved. Media competence is a key competence here. In this context, the optimization of information processes in the Austrian education system is essential and is also an important area of research. Communication with modern communication techniques and cooperation are indispensable here. This dissertation examines the main developmental steps of digitalization in the Austrian education system in a historical longitudinal section as well as their significance for teaching practice. The central areas of digital school development in the Austrian school system are examined and models of digitalization strategies are presented. In addition to comprehensive literature studies, relevant legal norms as well as meta-studies and individual case studies on the research topic were also examined.

Environmental Economics

Il est largement admis que le changement climatique, la globalisation et l'épuisement des ressources nous invitent à repenser nos modèles de société et l'organisation de nos territoires pour garantir un avenir viable. Pourtant, le changement vers des systèmes plus durables progresse lentement. Dans ce contexte, des initiatives locales émergent comme des leviers cruciaux pour l'innovation sociale et territoriale. Cependant, pour que ces initiatives prennent véritablement racine et produisent un impact significatif, il est impératif d'accompagner les acteurs du territoire dans leur déploiement à l'échelle locale. Cet ouvrage propose un cadre analytique pour comprendre, évaluer et soutenir ces processus d'innovation. À travers des exemples concrets, il explore les différentes dimensions de l'innovation à l'échelle des territoires, en passant par le rôle des collectivités territoriales dans la gouvernance des projets innovants à l'accompagnement des entreprises dans leur ancrage territorial. L'approche systémique et interdisciplinaire des chapitres, croisant plus particulièrement la science pour l'ingénieur, la gestion, l'économie et l'urbanisme, vise à fournir aux acteurs locaux un ensemble d'outils méthodologiques pour renforcer leur capacité à collaborer, comprendre et partager les enjeux essentiels, puis, concevoir et déployer des solutions durables.

This book comprises two empirical studies that use econometric techniques to examine loan loss provisions in Southeast Europe (SEE). The first study applies the Generalized Method of Moments estimator to a dynamic panel dataset, shedding light on specific loan loss provisioning practices. This study makes a unique contribution to the field, extending empirical evidence on discretionary and non-discretionary components of loan loss provisions in SEE. Additionally, the analysis of outlying observations offers interesting insights into potential motives influencing decisions on loan loss provisions. Filling a gap where research in SEE is infrequent, the second study uses individual structural vector auto-regression (SVAR) models for individual economies and panel SVAR models for SEE EU states and the Western Balkans, forecasting response functions of loan loss provisions to adverse GDP and employment shocks.

Value Added Tax (VAT) is the backbone of the EU Member States' tax systems. However, the rules for taxing Intra-Community delivery created opportunities for so called 'Missing Trader Intra-Community fraud' (MTIC). Together with the shadow economy, they represent VAT noncompliance, proxied by the so-called 'VAT gap'. The book explores the case of a severe VAT compliance crisis using the example of Poland. Although it has not experienced a recession after the Financial and Sovereign Debt Crises, the size of its 'VAT gap' reached the levels recorded by Greece – the hardest hit EU economy. The authors take a public policy perspective, examining the process of policy response formulation and implementation. They cover responses by the tax administration and legislative actions in the areas of tax, as well as criminal law.

COVID-19 has created a new reality in the life of entire societies, as well as in organizations. The directions and tools for the development of managers at all levels have become more difficult to define. This publication invites readers to engage in a deep reflection on the models, values, and sense of development for contemporary managers, including their emerging new competencies and methods for measuring them. It also explores the importance of health and the tools that support managers' development, such as new technologies and redefined coaching and mentoring. The authors are a wide group of specialists in supporting development, primarily active practitioners, with the support of experienced researchers in this area.

This book presents a detailed projection model to estimate future demand for care among older people. Using Poland as a case study, the author examines the impact of population ageing and changes in intergenerational relations on informal care provision. The book provides a comprehensive analysis of the primary factors driving the need for care: health status and living arrangements, with special attention given to the care needs of older persons living alone. The author employs a dynamic analytical approach that combines multi-state modelling and microsimulation with traditional macro-level population projections. As a result, this study provides new data points that can contribute to the development of a well-informed policy for managing care transfers in the future.

Late Hirschman: Theoretical exercises in "Self-Subversion" draws from the Colomi-Hirschman intellectual tradition the author has developed with close colleagues: recalls and rationalizes personal memoirs that come from the long collaboration of the author with Albert Hirschman; learns – once again – in depth from his work; desires, if possible, to make progress on some vexed questions; and breaks away from all forms of ritualism. Hirschman, homme libre, did not like orthodoxies or intellectual boundaries and the like. He certainly would not have liked to be now pigeon-holed by a part of the Academia. Gradually exploring alternative directions, Meldolesi proposes, therefore, in this book a group of exercises. They have been suggested by the late Hirschman's self-subverting phase of intellectual elaboration that, starting from the "interpretive social science" point of view elaborated in the late '70s of last century together with Clifford Geertz and other leading intellectuals at the Institute for Advanced Study (Princeton N.J.), touched later on numerous aspects of the long experience of Hirschman developed in three continents, and mirrored cautiously in his extraordinary work.

Poland and Taiwan: two parts of the world distant from each other, differing culturally and socially, and yet facing kind of similar challenges in the late 1980s and early 1990s – characterised by the transition from an authoritarian political system to liberal democracy. This book seeks to present the process of democratisation of Poland and Taiwan from the point of view of shared perspectives. Invoking the classical literature of transitionology, it is possible to explore similarities and differences between the democratisation of Poland and Taiwan among socioeconomic factors, fragmentation in society, political culture, meso- structures (e.g. political groups, social movements), political institutions, historical and national-identity aspects, and international influences.

Business and Innovation

EDITED BY DIMITRI UZUNIDIS, BLANDINE LAPERCHE, SOPHIE BOUTILLIER AND VIKTOR PROKOP

The creation of new activities, of news production and consumption modes, of new goods and services, of new markets and new jobs (etc.) depends as much on the heroic action of entrepreneurs as on the strategies of big corporations which develop their activities at a global scale. Innovation and business are interlinked. The main themes of the books published in this series are: « Entrepreneurship, enterprise and innovation »; « Innovation strategies in a global context »; « Innovation policies and business climate »; « Innovation, business dynamics and socio-economic change ». The synergies between innovative entrepreneurship, firms' strategies and innovation policies is of major importance in the explanation of technological paradigms change and of the transformations in economic and social structures of wealthy and less wealthy countries. In this series are published books in English or in French specialized in economics, management and sociology of innovation and also dealing with change and entrepreneurship in a local, national or international perspective.

This series is supported by the Research Network on Innovation.

Polish Studies in Economics

EDITED BY RYSZARD KOKOSZCZYNSKI

This series is meant to bring selected studies of Polish economists, both from academia and from public and private institutions, to the attention of an international audience. The books included in this series present themes that are either of international importance due to their subject or - even if they focus on issues important mainly to Poland and Europe - they are considered to be of a broader interest to economists, policy-makers and business elsewhere. Thus, the aim of the series is to contribute to the discussion of results of theoretical and applied research on topical economic issues. The series is also open to work emerging from research cooperation between Polish and foreign economists. Authors are welcome to submit manuscripts of monographs, collected volumes, post-conference volumes as well as dissertations.
